SUPREME COURT.

IN CRIMINAL SESSIONS.

(Before His Honor the Chief Justice, Sir JOHN SMITH.)

Tuesday, July 22nd.

ALLEGED LARCENY OF $470 BY A SERVANT. Chung Aying was charged with the larceny of $470, the property of Dr Eastlake, in whose employ he was as a house-boy.

He pleaded not guilty. The following was the jury: Messrs J. T. Latta, R. Schomburgk, J. Muirhead, W. Dittmer, J. G. Liddell, J. C. Hughes, and J. Anthony.

The Attorney General prosecuted, instructed by Mr. E. Sharp, the Crown Solicitor; and Mr. Haylar, Q.C., instructed by Mr. Deans, appeared for the accused.

The case for the prosecution, as stated by Mr. Russell was, shortly, this: On the 27th May Dr W. C. Eastlake placed in a jewel box, (the) which was on a table in his bed-room, a cheque for $200, another for $40, and $230 in Bank notes. Some of the money had been there before, but all was now returned to the box. The prisoner was in the room when the Dr put this money in the jewel-box, and saw the Dr place the key of the case in his wife's purse.

The purse and the case were both left there unprotected. He went down stairs, and on his wife asking him where he had put the key, he hearing the foot-steps apparently of a Chinaman, sent the butler upstairs for the purse, which was brought down stairs and given into the hands of Mrs Eastlake. The key was there then. This was about two o'clock. There was nobody in the room when the butler went for the purse; but prisoner was in the younger Mr Eastlake's room, which adjoins the bed-room.

Prisoner saw him there, taking away the purse. About 5 o'clock, the Dr., who had been out, told his wife that he had been out, and told her to place in the box, she took it up stairs, and opened the box, with the key which had been in her purse all the time, and then discovered that the cheques and money ($470) had been stolen. The boy, now prisoner, was suspected and was taken away in custody next morning at 7 o'clock. Both cheques were found shortly afterwards on the roof of the cook-house at the back, on to which it could be thrown from the verandah.

To these facts Dr Eastlake, his wife and the butler deposed.

Dr Van der Horck, who was during the whole time in his room, from which he could see Dr Eastlake's bed-room, stated that after Dr Eastlake had gone down stairs, he saw the prisoner in that room.

He heard the butler get an order from his master, and come and go down stairs; about a quarter of an hour afterwards he saw the prisoner pass to the verandah, and go down the servants' stairs. When the theft was discovered defendant entered and left the room, several times, and seemed excited. When he charged him the Doctor said "You are the man who stole the money; you saw me put it in." The prisoner said he had been a long time a boy with Doctor Eastlake, and his friend now could be so much a thing. He denied also having seen the money put in the jewel box.

Prisoner had been out in the afternoon, and while denying it at first, admitted to Sergeant Toomey, when he got to the charge-room, that he had been out, explaining that he had been to the washman's and had been to Fustan's house some of the servants in which he knew.

The case, being closed, Mr. Haylar addressed the jury on behalf of the prisoner. This boy, who left his last master with a certificate of "very careful, very honest," was now charged with what was to a man in his position the most serious charge that could befall him, namely that he being a domestic servant had stolen from the dwelling house of his master a large sum of money, and certain valuable securities. The evidence was purely circumstantial. He would, before he finished his short address to the jury, say a few words as to the value that was to be attached to evidence of this kind, its probative force as it was called. He would, first, however, briefly sketch the narrative that had been presented to them and show its bearing on the presumptions of the prosecution, and would show how that narrative was rebutted, how that theory was overthrown, by the acts of the man himself, and by other they found, was accumulating for some purpose or other a sum of money in his house. As it came out in his evidence in chief, one would have thought that the whole $470, in notes and cheques, was all put into the box on the 27th of May at one time, and that the prisoner who was then in the room was the only person who saw him put money there or knew that there was money there, but it was shown, in cross-examination that for a certain purpose to which he had devoted the money, Dr Eastlake had been accumulating money in that box for two days; it was probably known to the whole household that this was being done. Of course there was no proof of this, but in dealing with a case in which it was sought by circumstantial evidence to convict, the circumstances on the other side must also be considered. He quoted the authority of Mr Justice Best as to the inferential principle in such evidence. The first step for the prosecution was to prove that this man now charged was the only one who knew the money was there. That, he believed, was completely rebutted; the fact that there was money in that box, must have been known if not to all to a great many of the servants of the house. They had heard that there were fourteen servants in the establishment in different capacities. The theory for the prosecution was that the prisoner took the money in the three or four minutes which elapsed between the time when Dr Eastlake went downstairs and the time when the butler came up for the purse with the key in it. The man, it was the argument for the prosecution, smitten with a sudden criminal intent, yielding to the temptation that had been placed before him, then and there took the key out of the purse, secured and secreted the money, replaced the key and went about his work. And he would only have, by their own showing, some three or four minutes to do all this. Now, he laid before them the key and the lock that was on the box. In the first place, he asked them, was it not possible that the box was never locked at all; he knew many people who occasionally shot the bolt of lock past the corresponding catch; he sometimes did himself. The key was a common one, which might easily be imitated; if it was left lying about in the careless way from the evidence, there was everything favourable for taking an impression of it.

And, thirdly, they saw the lock here before them, a very common lock which there was plenty time to pick, and which it would be very easy to pick. Therefore, he claimed, it was not an inevitable inference that the lock, if it was ever locked, "phub's" lock, or a patent safety lock, the inference might have been very different; but as the facts stood, he contended that the considerations he had submitted deprived the evidence of Mrs Eastlake as to her having the keys in her pocket the whole afternoon of a great deal of its weight. The boy, it was said, was in the room where the money was, after his master went downstairs. Of course he was; he was there on his own business; he was dusting or cleaning out the room; there was nothing illegitimate or suspicious in his being there; there was not a vestige of proof, or suspicion even, that he was there to commit a crime. When he had finished Mrs Eastlake's room he went to the next room, that of Dr Eastlake's son, and went on with his work there. Meantime, the butler came up and took away the purse with the key in it, and took it to his mistress. Now, if the strongest rebuttal were desired of the theory that the prisoner had by that time abstracted the money, it was to be found in the fact that he continued his work in the room although he had thus, as it were, had warning, not exactly that there was any suspicion aroused, but that attention had been called downstairs to the fact that the key had been left in the bed-room where the box was. Dr Eastlake described the footstep in the bedroom which he and his wife heard downstairs as being the ordinary footstep of a Chinaman. This was a complete rebuttal of the theory of the prosecution. This was proof that the prisoner was then going round the room in the exercise of his regular duties and was not engaged in the commission of a felony as it was their case to prove. When the fact that the money was missing was brought to the notice of Dr Eastlake he did not seem to give one thought to the possibility of any irregularity having arisen from that family to which all human kind are prone, forgetfulness, or anything of the kind; but he seemed to have jumped to the conclusion that his money was stolen, and that this boy was the thief. Now, he came to the action of the boy himself. He was out in the afternoon. What was the most unlikely thing in the world for this boy to do, if he had got away with $230 in notes, and a cheque for $40 payable to bearer (the other cheque $200 had not been endorsed by the payee). The most unlikely thing in the world was that he would come back, and that was precisely what he did. The next last thing that any reasonable man would have done would be to keep upon his person the damning proof of his guilt to be found in the envelope and the cheques; for they were worthless, or one of them was; and it would be found clear enough that whoever stole the cheques stole the money. If this man had the cheques on him when he left the house, he made no attempt to get rid of them, for according to the theory of the prosecution he brought them back with him, and threw them on to the roof of the house at the back. When the detective came and the boy was called up and ordered to bring some soda-water upstairs, he saw the detective, he had heard of the loss, the officer was in uniform, he could not but have known who he was and what his purpose there. Then he went downstairs and brought up the soda, and still kept the cheques and the envelope on him. Had the prisoner then had the cheques about him, would not that have been his opportunity to get rid of them. The theory of the prosecution as to the man's behaviour, as the whole theory of the prosecution was, was entirely and absolutely incomprehensible. They were told the boy entered and left the room while these proceedings were going on, in an excited manner. Naturally, he would, any one would admit, knowing the loss that his master had suffered and that he was suspected of being the thief. An innocent man was much more likely to be excited in such circumstances than the guilty. So far as the narrative referred to the prisoner himself, he had been by his conduct rebutted, entirely the presumptions of the prosecution. He next called the attention of the jury to the fact that independent of the family there were fourteen servants in the establishment, and of whom was just as liable to have the knowledge of where this money was kept as he was; just as liable to suspicion as he was. He did not make a charge against any one; but he simply wanted the jury to appreciate the fact that there was no more evidence against the prisoner than against any of the others; they had been up and down stairs no doubt, the whole afternoon. In all cases of circumstantial evidence the presumptive guilt of which they had to be satisfied was what was called inevitable. Why had this envelope been thrown on to the roof of that house, of all places on the face of the earth, where it was sure to be seen. The verandah which came out to that roof was open to all the servants, and the most reasonable inference was, not that the prisoner put it there; he had not the opportunity after seven o'clock; had he done so it would assuredly have been blown away before next morning, when, they were told, it was found. He had, besides, several opportunities which if he ever had the cheques in his possession, he would not have failed to avail himself of. The most natural inference was that they were thrown there by somebody else, as a last resort, not for the purpose of concealment, but that they might be found there. When the charge was brought against the man he denied it; he had denied it all through, and denied it now. He put in evidence the prisoner's certificate of character from Mr Boulouze, who said he was a very honest and very careful servant. He believed the jury would require much stronger evidence than had been laid before them to-day, before they would convict this boy and have him sent to jail. He did not think, in fact, the evidence they had heard to-day was circumstantial evidence at all. There was nothing more than a suspicion against the man because he had had the opportunity. Of course it was absurd to suppose that Dr Van der Horck took the money, and he did not of course mean to insinuate anything of the kind for a moment; but he might point out that there was just as much evidence against him as against the prisoner. They had equal opportunities that afternoon for the removal of the money; but Dr Van der Horck's position and character rendered any supposition that he had anything to do with it quite absurd, as he had said; and the Chinese servant was suspected and placed in this serious position. Against neither was there one title of evidence. If the same rule were to be generally followed as had led to this boy being placed in the dock, every one who had an opportunity of committing a crime would be brought to Court and prosecuted. There was not a single fact to lead them to believe in the guilt of the prisoner. The Chief Justice briefly summed up. There could be no doubt that Dr Eastlake lost this money $230, and $240 in cheques; there would be no doubt it was lost between 2 o'clock and 5 o'clock on the 27th. The question was—Who took it? Their duty was to presume that somebody also took it, unless it was proved to their satisfaction as reasonable men that this servant now charged with the crime committed the theft. The learned Counsel had contended that there was no more evidence of this prisoner having taken it than of Dr Van der Horck having taken it. The argument was a strong one intended to point out to the jury that there was, as he contended, very little to identify the prisoner with the crime. Mr Haylar did not mean for a moment to raise any shadow of suspicion against Dr Van der Horck. He was sure the illustration was used in no offensive way; Mr Haylar would be the very last man to do that. Knowing, therefore, from Dr Van der Horck's character and position that any such supposition, used only for the sake of argument, could safely be dismissed from their minds, who with the prisoner to a presumption against him, connecting him with this theft. The learned Counsel for the defence had suggested that Mrs Eastlake had been in the habit of placing money in this box, then taking the key in her purse, and leaving them both in the room; and that probably all the house knew that money was kept there. The lock might have been picked. Now all this about the other servants knowing about the money being kept there was mere surmise; there was no evidence on the point. Mr Haylar stated that he had intended to ask Mrs Eastlake whether she had not previously put money in that box when other servants were present.

His Lordship said he would recall Mrs Eastlake; (she had gone home, but was sent for again). The Chief Justice remarked that he could not conceive it possible for any one to more flagrantly tempt a servant than Dr Eastlake did, by exposing that money in the way he did. He drew attention to the lies told by the prisoner to Dr Eastlake, when he said he was the money put there; and to the Police Sergeant in saying first he was not out of the house in the afternoon, and then telling him he was at the washman's and at Fustan's House. These lies went very much against a person on his defence; they were not to be taken as strong proof of the guilt of the man; but they were an indication of a guilty mind. The defence was a particularly ingenious one; the argument as to the possibility of simple lock like this being tampered with or opened by another boy was very ingenious. As to the man's going about up stairs with his shoes on, would a Chinaman be likely not to do that, and run the risk of being discovered in such an unusual situation, with his shoes off. The whole question for them was,—Is there any other person whom you consider it reasonably probable might have yielded to the sudden and violent temptation (and it was a most violent one), and knowing the money was there, have abstracted it? This was, as he had said, a very great temptation to throw in the way of the prisoner or any other man in a humble sphere of life; and it was a great pity that such temptations should be made. But foreigners, continuing this time after time, got off very cheaply for it, and so it went on. They were little inclined to be careful in keeping temptation out of the way of their servants. He had himself never been robbed by a servant, and he believed there were many in the same position; at the same time he had never put temptation in the way of his servants. This was all he had to say upon the case; he would now wait some time for Mrs Eastlake, to ascertain from her whether she was as careless as her husband had told them he was, in throwing temptation in the way of the servants.

Mr Eastlake had not arrived at the end of twenty minutes from the conclusion of his Lordship's remarks.

Mr Haylar stated that he did not desire to keep the jury longer than was necessary, and he would withdraw the question: If it was not thought very important.

His Lordship said it was a very important point for the prisoner.

The Foreman stated that the Jury considered it was quite immaterial. They were already agreed on their verdict.

On the verdict being called for in the usual way.

The Foreman said:—We unanimously find the prisoner "not guilty."

The Chief Justice: Then any evidence Mrs Eastlake could have given you as to her throwing the same temptation before other servants would have but strengthened you in that verdict.

The Foreman: Precisely, my Lord. Prisoner was then discharged.

The Court adjourned till to-morrow at 10 o'clock, when the Piracy case, the last on the calendar, will be heard before the Chief Justice.

Marine Court.

(Before H. G. Thomsett, Esq., R.N.)

Tuesday, July 22nd.

A CHIEF MATE FINED FOR ASSAULT.

Francis William Wisnom, chief mate of the British ship Colwyn, was charged by the steward, a man of colour, named Jenkins Adams, with assaulting him on the evening of the 19th inst.

Complainant states:—On Saturday evening, about half past seven o'clock, one of the seamen came from the fore-cabin and asked me for a quantity of oil. The time for serving out oil was four o'clock; this was a distinct order of the Captain's. I refused to serve out the oil, as I was otherwise engaged with my work, and wished to get done for the night; my hours of work are, generally speaking, from 5 a.m. till 8 p.m. The mate then came and told me to "dry up," and to serve out the oil and do as I was told. I refused to serve out the oil by his order, having contrary orders from the master of the ship; we had a few words, and were noisy. The Captain came forward and told me to make less noise, at the same time giving me a shove. I went aft to the pantry, when the mate struck me with a set of brass knuckles, knocking out four of my teeth; my mouth was full of blood. Two more of my teeth are loose, and of no use to me. In my temper I gave the mate a bit of cheek, when he replied, "You black—! I'll knock your head off." I went into my pantry and shut the door, seized hold of a stick; and told the mate if he came in, I would "put a head on him." I have been shamefully treated since we left London.

Thomas Bullman, master ship Colwyn, states:—On Saturday evening, while on the poop, I heard a row on the main deck. I went forward and found the steward and the chief mate talking loudly together. I ordered the steward to hold his tongue; he would not obey my orders. I tried to reason with him, when he swore at me and told me to go to—; I went away; the cook then came and took the steward to the fore part of the ship; he would not stay there, and came aft, again making a disturbance; and refusing to keep quiet; he was abusing the chief officer. I believe the chief officer struck the steward, but cannot be positive, as it was dark. I sent for the police boat intending to give the steward into custody for creating a disturbance; when the police arrived the steward promised to keep quiet, I did not give him in charge.

Frederick Kemball, second mate, states: I heard the man ask for oil. The steward was having his tea, and growled about the men not coming at the proper time for their weekly allowance. The mate told him to "dry up," which the steward refused to do. Some words followed, when the steward told the mate if he thought himself a better man than he was to step on to the main deck; the mate replied "all right." They rushed at one another and seemed bent on having a fight. I, in company with the cook, managed to get them separated. The Captain took the steward by the shirt and walked him into the pantry. The steward ordered the Captain out of the pantry, and told him he had no business there; the Captain did not quite see the point. The mate then went into the pantry and dared the steward to put him out. I heard a scuffle in the pantry, and saw the mate come out in a hurried manner, and also heard the steward tell the mate to give up the knuckle-dusters he had hit him with.

I have seen the mate with a knuckle-duster, and asked him what it was for; the mate explained its use to me and said he did not think he would require to use it. The mate accused the steward with threatening to use a knife on him, which the steward denied. This was after the mate had struck him. I went for a constable; when he came, they were quiet and no one was given in charge. After the constable left, complainant told the mate he would have satisfaction for the blood he had split, offering to fight him on the deck a fair stand-up fight, and threatening, if the mate did not give him satisfaction, that he would prosecute him for the assault he had committed.

Defendant states:—I got the knuckle-dusters from the steward on the passage out. He remarked, "You may find them useful if you have a row with those blackguards"—meaning the men forward. (The steward admitted having given the knuckle-dusters and said he had them given to him when leaving London.) On Saturday last the steward refused to serve out the oil, and made a great noise; we had a few words and were going to fight, but were prevented from doing so by the book and second mate. The steward ordered the Captain out of the pantry. I said to him: "You dare the Captain to enter the pantry? I'll come in; you put me out if you can." I had a row; he threatened to "do for me" if he waited seven years for an opportunity; he threatened me with a knife; he had previously knocked my cap off; I gave him a blow on the mouth.

In summing up the case, his Worship said, had the Captain followed the proper course and given the steward and the chief mate in charge for creating a disturbance, he would have done much to preserve good discipline on his ship in the future.

The Complainant had been examined, at his Worship's request, by the Colonial Surgeon, who was of opinion that a very slight blow would have knocked his teeth out; as they were in a decayed and diseased state.

His Worship advised the defendant to throw his knuckle-dusters overboard as soon as he could, as they might get him into serious trouble, and fined him $5 or one week's imprisonment.

The fine was paid.

Manila.

(Translated from our Manila Exchanges.)

The American barque Masonic was again put up for sale the third time on the 12th inst., but no offer has yet been made for her. She will probably be put up again for one-third and one-fifth less than her original value.

The barque Deila, engaged some time ago in the operations to raise the Maclin, in the attempt to float the ill-fated vessel, has up to the present been unsuccessful, and has returned to Manila.

There was no import or export of either gold or silver during the first fortnight of July in these islands.

The Comercio says that the Oceanic must be misinformed when he said that the tobacco of Calcutta has turned out to be superior to our leaves. We have heard that it is only comparable to that of Capiz, and is not even so good, although the Capiz tobacco is the worst production of the kind in our provinces.

The same journal also says that in the Oceanic of the 12th instant there was an article on some discoveries of copper mines in Cagayan, and advises those concerned to abandon the enterprise as "there is no mineral more difficult to be treated than the copper of Luzon, which is full of sulphur, antimony and other mixtures."

We do not think this is sound advice, but on the contrary that good mines may be discovered, and if its melting cannot be turned to advantage at present, which we do not see any inconvenience in doing, the mineral could be sold in its original state and exported, as copper is a well appreciated mineral, and the result would be a large income to the country as well as to the enterprising workman.

A letter from Iloilo, dated July 5th, says that it is expected next week, a steamer will arrive there from a China port which, it is assured, has come to load for Europe on account of a Spanish house at Manila.

At the sale of cigars on the 14th instant, 7372 millares were offered, and only 1879 millares were sold for a total sum of $21,812.

A general meeting of the members of the Plaza de Toros of Cavite took place on the 15th instant, when it was resolved, among other things, that another corrida (bull fight) will be arranged for the 25th prox., and that the flesh of the bulls killed in the fight will be distributed among the hospitals in port. [A sound flesh, no doubt, for the sick and invalids in hospitals after the excitement of a contested fight.—Ed. C. M.]

The British barque Brunette, Capt. Dow, arrived at Manila from Hongkong on the 16th, 17 days out.

The British ship Cutty Sark, Captain Wallace, arrived at Manila from Shanghai on the 17th, 35 days out.

The Spanish brig San Lorenzo was loading at Manila on the 14th, for Balabac, Puerto Princesa and Hongkong.

The British barque Doune Castle, Capt. Bridgman, left Manila for Liverpool on the 17th, with sugar, hemp and sapawood.

The American barque E. J. Watson, Capt. Hawkins, left Manila for New York on the 17th, with general cargo.

The British ship Connaught Ranger, Captain Murphy, left Manila for Liverpool on the 17th, with hemp and sugar.

The American barque Martha Davis for Boston, and the Norwegian barque Janger for London via Iloilo, were to leave Manila on the 19th.

The British barque Onate from Batavia, arrived at Iloilo on the 30th ultimo, and left a few hours afterwards for Boston via Manila.

The steamer Penado was chartered at 30 cents per picul, from Saigon to Iloilo; the Danish steamer Norden was chartered at 28 cents per picul from Saigon to Manila.

Iloilo, July 13.—Mr. Rodolph Hefty, a German subject and resident merchant in the neighbouring Isla de Negras, died the night before yesterday here. The deceased, who leaves a widow, having married only a year ago, came to Iloilo to bid good-bye to the German Consul and the wealthy merchant—Mr. Frederick Leuchinger, who leaves for Europe shortly, and to whom the deceased is bound by family relation. The funeral took place yesterday, and all the foreign residents as well as a large number of Spanish gentlemen, public functionaries, merchants and others accompanied his remains to the last resting place.—The American ship Cashmere left for Boston with 1,235,888 kilogram sugar and 45,234 kil. sapawood. The French barque Louise left for Saigon in ballast.

China.

NEWCHANG.

July 11.

We are having comparatively cool weather, the thermometer at night 60° to 70°, and the highest in the house not more than 78° to 82°. There has been more rain than the natives want, so I hear; but in the vicinity of the port the ground is still hard and dry, although there is no lack of water in the ponds.

The Customs' staff has its full complement now, and it speaks well for the generalship, and those who have had more than the usual work, that the business has been carried on to the satisfaction of everybody.

We are to have some great changes in the Consular service, so it is said. This is a very desirable port, as the climate is very good, and the work, even in the open season, not heavy.—N. C. D. News.

Japan.

NAOABASHI.

(Rising Sun, June 28th.)

We see from the Shanghai Courier that the master of the Ocean King, Captain Roper, well-known in China and Japan, has been non-suited in an action brought against the owners for wages and balance of ship's disbursements and expenses. The case was tried before Mr. Commissioner Kerr, at the City of London Court on the 9th April.

U. S. S. Richmond with General Grant and suite arrived here on Saturday last, and the Ashuelot on the same day. H. M. S. Grolier left on Sunday on a cruise; and returned on Tuesday night. H. M. S. Sylvia arrived on the same day. H. M. S. Lophoceros arrived on Thursday from Yokohama and proceeded to Hongkong after a stay of only eight hours. U. S. S. Richmond and Ashuelot, escorted by H. L. J. M. S. Kongo and Kam, left on Thursday for Shimoda en route for Yokohama. Men-of-war in harbour are: H. M. S. Grolier and Sylvia, and H. L. J. M. S. Nerys.

No wonder a ship is called "the." She has white, stars, an apron, hooks and eyes, pins, caps and ribbons, hoods, pappets, and a husband.

THE ENGLISH RESIDENTS AND THEIR MINISTER.

To the Editor of the NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS.

SIR,—There is an amusing story in that delightful book, "The Indian Garden," of a coolie who kept a cow. The animal was no use whatever to the coolie. He did not know what to do with it, and generally found the animal an incumbrance, but he periodically exhibited an ostentatious right of ownership over the creature by throwing stones at it! I have often read this passage and regarded it as an illustration of the way in which Britons treat their Minister at Peking. There are various persons other than Englishmen at the Northern Capital as everybody knows, and the interests of the great continental Powers are politically considerable and commercially important; but Americans, Germans, Frenchmen and Russians entertain or profess to entertain respect for their respective representatives, and seem to consider that their envoys' dignity and their own are indissolubly united. It is not so with the subjects of Queen Victoria in those ports and places which they visit for purposes of trade. These children of freedom and Magna Charta are never so supremely happy as when they are proving to demonstration that their Representative is useless and their Legation a fiction and a nullity. The lack of esprit de corps is, however, generally speaking, a curious defect in modern official life. In the old days loyalty to a chief was carried to the point of pig-headed folly, but it had certain commendable qualities in it as a national characteristic. The present residents in Shanghai have not mastered the commercial and political question as their predecessors always tried to do before they ventured to talk or write about it. A competitive examination in the history of the China trade, in the dates and provisions of treaties, &c., would be a trying ordeal for most of them; and yet they have always a stone to throw at their Representative.

The fact is that the leading idea of many persons is that for some reason or another, either about the lekin tax or about the pulling down of a Missionary Chapel, we ought anyhow to fight the Chinese. It is obvious that a war would lead to an utter stagnation of trade and a general collapse of industry, but at least it would be what is called "an energetic policy," and would revenge the murder of Mr. Margary, the injuries suffered or wrought by the Church Missionaries at Wu-shih-shan, the depression of trade, and a number of other calamities too numerous and ghastly to catalogue. It is no answer to persons clamouring for all these heroic vindications of national honour to point to the fact that a war with China would be a very difficult task, and that our present situation is one which with all its defects would be materially injured by attempting to hasten the steady development of the country in its own way.

If we glance for a moment at the map of the World and see the extraordinary responsibilities which Great Britain has assumed, and which appear to be continually increasing, we may surely cease to blame a Minister at Peking for not adding to those responsibilities, in order to hurry on events which may be well and wisely left to that chapter of accidents which though sarcastically called "the bible of the tool" is more or less everybody's bible. There is not only a tide in the affairs of men and nations—there is a sequence. Certain things have to be done before certain other things. China is held in reserve and will play a part quite prominent enough for all of us when her time comes. Reading the telegrams that are received every week with relation to Egypt and the Cape, we should see good reason for thankfulness that an overzealous Envoy Extraordinary has not forced us into hostile relations with a Power which, though ominous and unwieldy, has untold resources and great capacity of "last."

What China will adopt the appliances which are the outward and visible signs of Western civilization within ten years or twenty years is certain. Many foreigners desire that she should be forced into doing so at once. Nothing could be more undesirable than for reforms to be forced on China at the point of the bayonet. We want her to be convinced by our showing that we are ourselves the better for the possession of these appliances. This it may be believed China's foremost men and the people who come into contact with foreigners at the open ports feel. The missionaries of progress are slowly working their way. The Embassy at home is not without its uses; the Imperial Customs, and the more cultivated and energetic religious societies who scatter papers on secular villages and illustrated books amongst the villages and inland towns, are doing good. We must not expect grand results from diplomatic or military victories, but from the establishment of a pro-foreign public opinion. Every individual has it in his power to hasten the formation of this satisfactory frame of mind.

Yours truly,
ALFRED ALDERMAN PARTER.

9th July.

COMPRADORES' AND HONG STAMPS

"W. T. K." thus writes to the Foochow Herald under date 9th inst:—

SIR,—It may not be generally known that Compradores in foreign service often cut and make use of seals bearing the Chinese characters of their employers' (hong names) and that, upon the faith of these, money transactions in many instances pass between themselves and the natives. In one case, I know for a fact that the Compradore of a certain foreign firm in Foochow issued several promissory notes for various sums of money—stamped with his employer's Chinese hong seal; and when the notes fell due he refused payment on the ground that the hong (firm) belonged to a foreigner, although he admitted that the notes were issued by him on his own personal responsibility, as well as that the transactions passed between himself and the Chinese holders of the notes, yet he maintained they had no claim upon him but rather upon the foreign head of the firm!

As a delicate question like this has probably never been tested in a Court of Law, and as I have no means of ascertaining how far the authority of using such seals in money matters is to be held legal, I shall feel much obliged if you will enlighten me on the subject.

Merchant Vessels in Hongkong Harbour.

Analyses of late Arrivals and Departures reported to-day.

To facilitate finding the position of any vessel in the Harbour, the Anchorage is divided into eight Sections, commencing at Green Island. Vessels near the Hongkong shore are marked A, near the Kowloon shore K, and those in the body of the Shipping or midway between each shore are marked C, in conjunction with the figures denoting the sections.

Section.
1. From Green Island to the Gas Works.
2. From Gas Works to the Novelty Iron Works.
3. From Novelty Iron Works to the Harbour Master's Office.
4. From Harbour Master's Office to the P. and O. Co.'s Office.
Section.
5. From P. and O. Co.'s Office to Peddar's Wharf.
6. From Peddar's Wharf to the Naval Yard.
7. From Naval Yard to the Pier.
8. From Pier to East Point.
